Dear Hiring Manager,

Good Day!

I am an electronics tech with over two year's worth of experience in not only the medical device industry, but also high stakes multimillion dollar R&D projects. Skill wise, I am known as a 'Jack-of-All Trades'--an individual able to gracefully adapt to any workload and integrate to any team I am in. Those who work with me may find that I always aim to be highly accurate and precise in what I do, and although one may be inclined to think that I am too serious of an individual to get along with given my standards, worry not! I also have honed my soft skills to match my heightened technical abilities. I can befriend almost anyone and support them to be their best selves at work. No job is too big or too small for me.

I have put in the time to continuously push for self improvement and growth to keep up with our technologically dependent society. This is reflected in my portfolio where I try to post personal projects frequently.

If you would like to know more about the friendly tinkerer behind the screen, please do not hesitate to reach out. I've attached my resume detailing my adventures as a career woman so far!

I look forward to hearing from you soon!
